

Population of Counties by Decennial Census: 1900 to 1990
Compiled and edited by Richard L. Forstall, Population Division
U.S. Bureau of the Census

April 20, 1995

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

This table gives the population of each county or county equivalent from 1900 to 1990 as reported in 10 successive decennial censuses. Generally, the populations are shown as they were published in the reports of each census; corrections to census counts made in later census reports are not reflected. Changes in counties that have occurred since the 1990 census are not shown.

Some counties were created after 1900 from parts of others, and many counties have had changes in boundaries during this period. This should be kept in mind in comparing populations at different dates. The reports of each census give information on boundary changes since the preceding census. Another good source of information on county boundary changes is "Map Guide to the U.S. Federal Censuses, 1790-1920," by William Thorndale and William Dollarhide (Baltimore, Genealogical Publishing Company, 1987).

A few counties appear in the table that existed in 1900 or at some census since, but later became parts of other counties. The notes below specify what happened to them. For new counties formed since 1940, notes specify which counties they were taken from. Notes also explain all cases where the populations in the table for the counties of a State do not sum to the State total. There also are notes on counties whose names have changed significantly since 1900; these appear in the table under their present-day names.

Each currently existing county has a five-digit code, assigned as part of a Federal Information Processing Standard (FIPS) by the National Institute of Standards and Technology, U.S. Department of Commerce. The first two digits are for the State, and the last three for the county within the State. These standard codes appear in the table. For a few counties that went out of existence before these codes were assigned, this table assigns a code with a decimal to position the county in alphabetical sequence within its State.

The data file and notes were compiled and edited by Richard L. Forstall. Further information may be obtained by writing Population Division, Bureau of the Census, Washington, DC 20233, or by calling 301 763-2422.

NOTES FOR INDIVIDUAL STATES AND COUNTIES

ALASKA

Alaska has no counties, and the names, boundaries, and designations of the subdivisions reported in the census have evolved considerably over recent decades. In 1990 and 1980, most of the population of the State lived in entities designated as Boroughs; the remainder was reported by Census Areas (sometimes abbreviated C.A. in the table). In 1970, the census was reported by Census Divisions, some of which corresponded to boroughs. In 1960, the census was reported by 24 Election Districts.

The table lists areas that existed in 1990 with their 1990 names and designations. In both the table and the notes, areas listed without any designation had ceased to exist by 1990; in 1980 they were Census Areas, in 1970 Census Divisions, and in 1960 Election Districts.

The name of the Prince of Wales-Outer Ketchikan Census Area is abbreviated in the table as Prince of Wales- Census Area, and the name of the Skagway-Yakutat-Anoon Census Area is abbreviated as Skagway-Yakutat- Census Area.

For the censuses of 1930 and 1940, Alaska actually was enumerated in the fall of the preceding year (1929, 1939).

Changes 1960-1990

The notes below give information on area names used in the 1960-80 censuses that differ from those used in 1990. Formations of boroughs since 1970 also are mentioned, but changes in designations (for example, from Census Division to Census Area) are not specified. For areas whose boundaries changed between 1980 and 1990 sufficiently to affect the 1980 population, the 1980 population in the 1990 territory is given. There also were many additional boundary changes during the 1960s and 1970s.

For areas that existed in 1960, 1970, or 1980 but not in 1990, the notes specify the areas of which they became part. When areas were formed or dissolved, small portions may have come from or gone to other areas not specified. No designations appear in the table for these extinguished areas; as noted above, in 1980 they were Census Areas, in 1970 Census Divisions, and in 1960 Election Districts.

VIRGINIA

In Virginia, when a town becomes a city it also becomes independent of its county. The table for Virginia lists these independent cities separately after the counties. Many new independent cities have been created since 1900, and there also have been numerous annexations from counties to cities. Several former counties have disappeared through annexation to cities, or through the whole county becoming a city. In spite of their names, the counties named Charles City, James City, and (until 1952) Elizabeth City are counties, not independent cities.

Persons interested in population changes over time often prefer to combine the Virginia independent cities with an adjacent county, to eliminate or reduce the effect of the numerous county/city boundary changes. At the end of this note is a list of the cities specifying the county from which each city originally was formed, with information on which combinations generally are made.

Notes on Individual Virginia Counties

Arlington County, formerly Alexandria County, was renamed in 1920.

Elizabeth City County was annexed to Hampton city in 1952.

Nansemond County became Nansemond city in 1972 and then was annexed to Suffolk city in 1974.

Norfolk County, after many annexations to neighboring cities in the 1950s, became part of newly established Chesapeake city in 1963.

Princess Anne County was annexed to Virginia Beach city in 1963.

Warwick County became Warwick city in 1952 and then was annexed to Newport News city in 1958.
